

WHAT IS CCF

The CCF promotes the role of existing HRH working groups or committees (or the creation of one where they do not yet exist) as being central to the process of bringing together all stakeholders working in HRH at country level. The rationale for such a process is that it can harness the contribution of all stakeholders, facilitating a coherent, coordinated and relevant focus for all their actions at country level.

Supporting countries in undertaking CCF recommendations for implementation requires institutional strengthening and capacity building of national stakeholders in respective countries. However, given the mandate of the Alliance, it will be difficult to provide such direct support. In this regard, the Alliance would like to work with national organizations such as:

- Local management or public health training institutions; or,
- Local research institutions; or,
- Local training and research consulting institutions; or
- Professional associations.

In Asia countries, the Alliance will work closely with AAAH and international partner members of the Alliance to support selected countries HRH stakeholders involvement in the development or implementation of their HRH plan.

The membership of the CCF working group or committee should include, among others, representatives from ministries of health, finance, education, labour, local government, public service commission/agency, professional associations, training institutions, civil society (NGOs and faith-based organizations), private sector, development partners (multilateral and bilateral agencies working in budgetary support or project mode), regulatory bodies and, depending on the country situation, any other stakeholder whose work impacts on HRH.
